Dear Filip,

Just a quick update on the Adelphi Street report. I have been in contact with Salford Museum and confirmed that they have the rest of the paper archive from this site and that they are now expecting the pipes to be delivered to them, once I have final publication text to go with them. I have also been in touch with Ian Miller who was involved in the original excavation and I should be able to get the four large boxes of pipes and kiln waste to him, and he will deliver them to Salford Museum.

I have not heard back from Post-Medieval Archaeology yet, but they did say it would probably be September/October before they came back with a definitive answer (see my email of 14 June below). If I do not hear back from them in a week or two, I will chase them up to see how it is progressing.

In the meantime, please find attached an invoice for my work to date in submitting the text for publication. I would be grateful if you could pass this on the appropriate person in your finance system for payment. Many thanks.

Best wishes for now,

David

Dear Filip,

Thanks for this – I will go ahead and get the text submitted for review.

All the best for now,

David.

Dear Filip,

Further to our call earlier in the week, I have now completed a review of the report text and replaced some of the illustrations in accordance with Norman Redhead's comments to produce a final site report – attached.

With regard to publishing the paper to discharge the planning condition, I have also been in touch with the editor of Post-Medieval Archaeology to see if they will accept this paper for publication. They have confirmed that they would be interested in publishing this paper, subject to a peer review. They will, however, require a lot of reformatting of the text and illustrations to meet their house style before they will send it out for review, and they have sent me guidelines to do this.

They have also said that, as this is a developer funded project, they will require a grant towards the publication cost, but I am still trying to ascertain from them what sort of a cost this might be.

With regard to timing, they said that it would take about 3 months to go through the peer review process and so it is likely to be September/October before they come back with a definitive answer if I submit the text to them now. So that is probably the earliest it could definitely be confirmed that the paper has been accepted for them by publication.

I initially said to Stephanie that it would take 2-3 days @£240 to prepare the text for publication, but she only sent me an order for 2 days work. It is clear from the guidelines that the editor has sent that it will take me at least 3 days in total to deal with all their submission requirements (including the revision of the attached text that I have already done). There could then be another day or two at a later stage if they come back with further changes that are required after peer review. Are you happy for me to proceed to now submit the text to them on this basis?

I will press them to come up with a likely cost for the publication grant that will be required.

I hope that this all makes sense,

Best wishes for now,

David.

Dear Filip,

Just a quick note to say that I didn't manage to get the Adelphi Street report finalised this week, but I am working on it. I have some commitments next week but will do my best to get it to you by Wednesday.

With best wishes for the weekend,

David

David,

Thanks for the confirmation.

I have a meeting scheduled next Wednesday afternoon (14/06).

Do you think it is feasible to finish the report and send it out for publication before then?

Dear Filip,

Thank you for your messages and sorry you had trouble getting hold of me – I was away on holiday for 2 weeks.

It's taken a while to 'get back up to speed' with Adelphi Street after such a long time, and fitting it in with other projects that have come up since, but I hope to be able to get you a final draft of the report by the end of the week.

Best wishes for now,

David
